Find free legal assistance and advice in Ohio

Depending on where you live in Ohio, there are several different organizations in Ohio that can provide free legal advice. Many low and moderate income families are concerned about legal problems that may interfere with their ability to provide for their basic needs. If you can't afford your own attorney, you can turn to these organizations for services such as helping to save your home from foreclosure, help from illegal debt collection practices, advice for economic security and assistance, and you can use a lawyer to get help and protection from abuse. You of course need to be qualified based upon income.

The programs are funded by both the federal government as well as private donations. All of the law firms and lawyers provide high-quality, free civil legal services. They are dedicated to providing information, legal advice, and can even represent clients. Learn more about the programs and the agencies here.

Clients can get advice in all legal, civil law matters such as:

- Foreclosure assistance, counseling, and even advice on how to deal with predatory lending and mortgages. Learn more on Ohio free legal foreclosure assistance programs.
